Smart and Connected Churches for Promoting Health in Disadvantaged Populations

This project aims to develop a research infrastructure that will be used to co-design and evaluate technologies in collaboration with community partners. The project will leverage the deep social support networks already existing in the Boston area. Key technologies developed in this effort include crowdsourced health interventions, in which community members author or culturally tailor intervention rules and messages.

Healthy Kids, Healthy Futures

This project aimed to prevent early childhood obesity by supporting health promoting environments where young children live (home), learn (preschool), and play (community). HKHF drew on the resources of its two institutional funding partners to build capacity among its community partners, Action for Boston Community Development (ABCD), Inc. Head Start and the City of Boston's Boston Centers for Youth & Families (BCYF), and assisted them in expanding the services they are able to offer to families with children disproportionately at risk of obesity.
